She remembers the day the photographer took the picture . The man was a stranger , but he asked if he could and she agreed to let him take it. She had never been photographed before . and until they met the second time 17 years later , she was not photographed again .

The photographer , Steve McCurry , remembers the moment too . It was 1984 and he was recording the lives of Afghan refugees in a camp in Pakistan . She was looking out of the school tent and he admits thinking at the time that the picture would nothing special . Yet the Afghan girl , as the picture is now known , became after a few years , one of the most iconic images . McCurry used her intense expression , so untypical of an average , carefree girl , to warn us not to ignore the victims of war , especially its young victims .

In 2002 National Geographic encouraged McCurry to return to Pakistan to look for the girl . After showing her photo around the refugee camp , he found a man who had known her as a child and knew where to find her . He offered to bring her from her home in the Tora Bora mountains in Afghanistan and after three days returned with Sharbat Gula , a woman perhaps 29 years old . McCurry Knew at once that this was her .
